NASA grant to help improve communication in engineering

By Rebecca Starrick
Daily Staff Writer

Cal Poly is the only primarily-undergraduate institution in the country to receive a $600,000 NASA grant that will blast off the aeronautical engineering curriculum toward researching communication and team work, according to university administrators.

The National Aeronautics and Space Administration (NASA) will give Cal Poly $200,000 every year for three years.

Notification of the award was made in July, said Russell Cummings, chair of the Aeronautical Engineering Department and principal investigator of the research project.

Besides aiming to improve communication between engineers and non-engineers while working on projects, Cummings said "funds will be used for graduate students to create mainly computer-based tools for undergraduates."

Part of the grant will be used to pay graduate students and fund their tuition. Additional grant money will go towards research costs.

During winter quarter Dani Soban, a aeronautical engineering graduate student, will assist Joanne Freeman, chair of the Industrial and Manufacturing Engineering Department and project leader. They will research the use of economic analysis tools to help designers keep track of costs as they develop ideas.

"The research is not just for design but how to make airplanes efficiently considering cost," Freeman said.

"We hope to get design philosophy into the hands of freshmen, so when they use it as seniors (in the aeronautical design class for seniors) the concepts will not be new to them," Soban said.

Other project participants include aeronautical engineering professors Daniel Biezad and Robert Van't Riet, industrial and manufacturing engineering professors Unny Menon and Archie Cheda, psychology and human development professor Daniel Levi and management professor Ray Haynes.

Cummings said a variety of disciplines are involved to help engineers communicate effectively in the real world.

Levi will be involved in team-building research.

"This grant was a chance for us to get involved in a multi-disciplinary program so our students would be better prepared for the industry," Cummings said.

"An industrial advisory board visits and we try to listen to them," Cummings said.

Representatives from Northrop, Boeing and McDonnell-Douglas make up the advisory board and will help with the introduction of the multi-disciplinary design concepts.

Money missing from Kennedy Library

Rebecca Starrick
Daily Staff Writer

An unnamed suspect stole $250 from Kennedy Library Friday morning, according to University Police.

"There is a suspect involved in more than one situation," said Investigator Mike Kennedy. He would not comment on the nature of the other crimes.

The theft occurred at 9 a.m. when Jim Johnson of More Office Systems in San Luis Obispo was collecting money from the copy machines at the library's Copy Center.

More Office Systems owns the copy machines. The money is usually collected by the company and deposited into the bank, according to police.

He set down the money bag, which was filled with $1, $5, $10 and $20 bills. He turned his back for a moment and when he turned around, the money was gone, police said.

The suspect is involved in an on-going investigation, Kennedy said.

Philosophy Department now lists religion courses under new prefix

By Dawn Pillsbury
Daily Staff Writer

The Philosophy Department won't just be teaching the likes of Kant and Mill winter quarter. The curriculum is being revamped to include religious study classes as well.

Philosophy professor Judy Saltzman will be teaching two courses winter quarter which delve into the nature of religion: Hinduism and Judaism.

The two courses are offered in the winter class schedule under a new heading — Religious Studies.

"We wanted to have truth in advertising," Saltzman said. "These courses are different than those others offered under the Philosophy heading.

"My colleagues and I felt that this would be more truthful," Saltzman said. "It's not that I don't teach regular philosophy courses. But these are more concrete, with the history and background as well."

She said she has been teaching religious studies for 19 years in connection with the Philosophy Department.

"Religion is different from philosophy," she said. "It involves some of the same aspects. It contains a lot of history, sociology and linguistics."

"But the questions are what motivates us from the inside."

Academic Senate to vote on calendar within two weeks

By Lisa M. Hansen
Daily Assistant Managing Editor

The Academic Senate unanimously voted Wednesday to decide by the end of this month if it would support a calendar change at Cal Poly.

The Senate debated the impacts a change would have on faculty, students and instruction for more than an hour, which some Senators claimed was redundant of past meetings.

A resolution passed last year would require a faculty vote if the Senate votes for a change in the calendar system.

After the Senate states its position, President Warren Baker will make a final decision. If semesters are approved, the change will not take effect for at least two years.

Senate Chair Jack Wilson said discussion on the remaining items, costs of a change, summer session impacts and various other affects on instruction will conclude by the Nov. 29 meeting.

Wilson outlined guidelines for debate, which he said has at times been emotional. The possible calendar change has been on the Senate's agenda for more than a year. Senators' remarks were limited to three minutes to ensure a variety of opinions were expressed, Wilson said.

"Don't feel too bad if we vote for semesters, it's not the end of the world," he said. "And don't feel bad if the vote comes to quarters. We'll survive this."

Tension ran high during the meeting, as the Senate sharply divided itself on the issue.

"I think changing to semesters will revise curriculum across the board, which is sadly out-of-date," said political science professor Joseph Weatherby. "In the long run, it will be a positive thing. Unless the calendar is changed, I don't see any change in the curriculum."

English professor John Hampsey agreed, speaking strongly in favor of a change to semesters, citing the English

Texas Latinos slam California, call for Mickey Mouse boycott

By Peggy Fikac
Associated Press

AUSTIN — Two Hispanic groups on Tuesday urged a minority boycott of California-related products and entertainment — including Mickey Mouse — after that state voted to deny education and other services to illegal immigrants.

"If California doesn't want our people, we don't want to do business with California," said state Rep. Roberto Alonzo of Dallas, head of the Mexican American Democrats of Texas, one of two state MAD groups.

Alonzo was joined at a Capitol news conference by Dallas businessman Luis de la Garza, president of the North Texas immigrant-rights organization El Grupo de Apoyo a Inmigrantes Latinoamericanos, or GAILA.

De la Garza, who has a radio talk show, and Alonzo said they've received calls of concern since California's Nov. 8 passage of Proposition 187.

"The hysteria ... has already come to Texas," Alonzo said, recounting the story of a woman who was told by a bill collector, "Ma'am, if you don't pay your bill, now that Proposition 187 has passed, we're going to call the INS (Immigration and Naturalization Service) in to deport you."

Alonzo, calling specifically on minority leaders and organizations, said groups shouldn't have their conventions in California and should boycott "anything that's connected to California, even Mickey Mouse. We should stop doing business with California."

BOYCOTT: Disneyland spokesman says park is neutral on Prop. 187

Hispanic-Americans in Arizona also have planned action in response to the proposition's passage, including a boycott.

Disneyland spokesman John McClintock said Disney is neutral on Proposition 187 and the park hasn't yet seen an effect on attendance. "It's a free country, and I think people should be able to do what they feel they have to do," McClintock said of the proposed boycott.

Ron Prince, chairman of California's Save Our State group and an author of Proposition 187, said the measure has nothing to do with bill collectors and it isn't targeting a particular race.

Prince said the proposition was prompted by concerns about the cost of providing services to undocumented immigrants and their effect on the state.

"We're not talking about immigration. We're talking about illegal aliens. Those are two very different things," he said. "California does not want illegal aliens."

A spokesman for California Gov. Pete Wilson didn't immediately return a telephone call from The Associated Press.

Proposition 187, which was approved last week and is being challenged in court, would deny public education, non-emergency health services and welfare benefits to illegal immigrants.

NASA: Grant may help improve quality of aeronautical engineering grads

The representatives will "allow us to talk to their staff and provide advice, materials and access to know how they efficiently produce an aircraft," Menon said.

The aircraft companies also will provide summer internships.

The industry has changed because of the global competition in airspace, Cummings said, adding that the recession has caused the industry to become more efficient.

"The grant will improve the quality of Cal Poly aeronautical engineering graduates," Cummings said. "They will be more well-rounded and have the total picture of what it means to design an aircraft. The undergraduates will learn to work in groups with other engineers and non-engineers."

The application process began in summer of 1993.

NASA sent notices all over the country, according to Cummings. Cal Poly administrators had two weeks to put together a proposal.

Cummings said the application was a two-phase process.

During phase one, Cal Poly was one of 20 universities out of 44 that applied to receive a $50,000 NASA grant to put together a 25-page proposal for phase two, Cummings said.

During fall and winter quarters of last year Freeman, Cummings and a few students met once a week to investigate ways to modify curriculum to better prepare students for the real world, according to Sandy Grabhorn, a committee participant and aeronautical engineering graduate student.

Other student participants were Walter Patrick, a graduate engineering management student and Alejandro Garcia, a graduate industrial engineering student.

The group focused on enhancing the aircraft design class, a one-year course for seniors, Grabhorn said. "Students aren't involved in group activities until this class," she said. "In the real world, all you do is deal with people."

Levi said he is exploring ways to integrate group activities into the current curriculum.

The group plans to teach freshmen how to work with each other, Grabhorn said.

Phase two also included presenting the proposal orally at NASA headquarters in Washington D.C.

"I was so nervous," Grabhorn said. "The presentation in Washington D.C. was a week before finals."

Grabhorn said Cal Poly presented the proposal as a team since they were looking to incorporate group activities into the curriculum.

Cal Poly was one of the few schools that presented the proposal as a team, Grabhorn added.

Other universities awarded $600,000 grants were Virginia Polytechnic, Georgia Tech, Clemson and Brigham Young University.

We study the great texts that have influenced history: the Koran, the Bible, the Bhagavad Gita.

She said the effort to give religious studies its own heading started 15 years ago, but the commitment wasn't there.

"Then a few years ago, (the Philosophy Department) got a major, and then five years ago, we decided to give a different prefix to religious studies.

"Maybe this will encourage students. This is not philosophy, but it has rigor, it has heart. It comes from the spiritual life of the people we study."

The broader courses in religion listed under the Philosophy heading have given way to more directed studies.

The Asian Religions course has splintered into two courses: "Hinduism" and "Buddhism," which will be offered under the Religious Studies prefix. The course on Judeo-Christian religions has become "Judaism and Christian Origins."

Saltzman also will be offering a course in Islam.

The course in Hinduism she will be offering this winter will focus primarily on the Veda, the book of ancient Hindu mythology, and the Upanishads, the commentary on the Veda, she said.

"Just doing Hinduism will give us time to discuss the issue of apparent polytheism," she said. "We will also discuss the goddess and feminist issues and yoga."

The course will include a trip to a temple in Malibu, she said.

The course in Judaism will focus on the Torah, the first five books of the Bible, and the Talmud, the compendium of learning of rabbis over thousands of years, Saltzman said.

The Philosophy Department shifted these courses to a Religious Studies prefix for winter quarter because of their separate nature, said Philosophy Department Chair Diane Michelfelder.

"The main reason was to give world religion courses the identity that they deserve to have, a profile of their own," she said.

"The courses really are religion courses rather than philosophy courses. They deal not just with religious beliefs, but practices, social context and history."

She reiterated Saltzman's statement about truth in advertising.

"Since we are a Philosophy Department to begin with, the truth is something that we could all get behind," she said.

She said the courses do not currently fill the United States cultural pluralism requirement.

"My understanding is that we will resubmit that," she said. "It was perceived as not meeting the multicultural requirement. For example, the course in Buddhism has an international emphasis and is not, technically speaking, multicultural."

Saltzman said the courses do, however, fulfill general education requirements.

"We're not dealing with American issues, but I think that multiculturalism ought to be international.

"We start with where Hinduism started — in India, thousands of years ago."

SENATE: Faculty discusses impacts switch to semesters would have on students, curriculum

Department's recent adoption of new curriculum based on the semester system.

"The question is, do teachers teach better in a semester system? Do students learn better in a semester system? Think of all the stopping and starting of a quarter system."

Hampsey said nearly 94 percent of the nation's universities are on the semester system.

"If the problem is a curriculum change, then let's identify it as such," said agribusiness professor Bill Ampacher. "If what we need is a curriculum change, then let's look at the alternatives. Don't hide it under the 'calendar' issue."

However, mathematics professor Harvey Greenwald said there is no difference in the amount of instruction in a quarter or a semester.

"Calculus is calculus," he said. "Linear algebra is linear algebra. We use the same books as everybody else, we cover the same amount of material."

Philosophy professor Tal Scriven expressed discontent with the direction of the debate.

"I've heard all these arguments before," he said. "This discussion has been going on for two years, and I haven't heard anything new."

Ampacher said he found it hard to believe that the Senators were trying to decide "what's best for the students when they clearly stated it last week."

He was referring to ASI's re-statement of its support for the quarter system.

After 40 minutes of debate on the instructional impacts, the Senate addressed effects of the proposed change on students.

"Now I understand the meaning of all-nighters," said architectural engineering professor Mark Berrio. "Our seniors just don't sleep."

But ASI College of Engineering Representative Scott Buswell said he feels students come to Cal Poly for the broad-based education a quarter system provides.

"Why change a good thing?"

he said. "We're a top university in the country, if not the world. Again, why change a good thing?"

Dawn Archibeque, an ASI representative from the College of Agriculture, agreed with Buswell.

"Students come here willing to work hard, and they expect the faculty would have to work just as hard," she said.

Berio said he feels his lack of time to commit to grading students' projects is unfair to his students.

"I am not doing my students a good service," he said. "I would do this if we had more physical time. I have to rush through projects that are thick — and I barely read them."

Week Nine knee-knocking

Dear Diary,

Well, I have made it this far. Almost to the end of my first quarter here. Time has gone so fast.

But while the time with my friends has blown by, classes seem to go slower and slower. I haven't even finished this quarter, but I am excited for new classes, a change and a new challenge.

But I worry — what if I blow the finals? Everything I worked for in nine weeks will be lost. I can't give up — keep working, keep studying, keep reading. I keep repeating this in my head. If I study, I can make it. I have to make it through.

What if I can't bring my grades up with the final? No, I can, if I study.

What if I get on academic probation? No — I won't let that happen.

What if I lose my scholarship? I can't afford everything.

What if I flunk out of school? Relax, I am getting too far ahead of myself.

Everything has changed. New surroundings, all new friends, teachers, classes and new memories, but still the same dreams and expectations to live up to.

But wait, what if I succeed? What do I really want to do for the rest of my life? It is up to me — what if I make the wrong decision? How can I go out on my own? I don't feel like an adult — I'm only 17.

Stop, I can't think about that. I need to concentrate on right now, take classes one at a time. Make the best out of each situation — that is what they say to do.

I have so many confused emotions inside me. Sometimes I want to cry, just release; but how do I explain why I am crying to everyone else. They will think I am crazy or completely depressed.

I am just so confused. Somedays I feel like I am walking in circles. Other times, I feel like jumping up and clicking my heels in the air.

According to scientists, life starts the day you are born; but for me, life has just started. When someone tells me I can't do something, I can't turn the other way and give up.

I think I have the spirited flame in me which will burn until I succeed, until I make my difference, until I become president! Just kidding!

Well, I gotta go study — two tests this week. And always more chapters to read.

COMMENTARY

Classical argument in a modern quandary

By Randy Davis

Some weeks ago, Ardarius McDonald appropriated the poetic form to ask questions such as "What if I knew my true culture?" and "What if we were truly free?"

This thought-provoking series of questions was met with a barrage of responses which were at once indicative of bigoted minds and the need for this institution to look itself fully in its many-hued face. (Bigot: "a person obstinately or intolerantly devoted to his or her opinions and prejudices.")

In particular, I was interested in the response of Greg Heirshberg, "English graduate student." This particular example of intolerance and poorly applied critical thinking skills is unfortunately all too representative of the general tone and scope of the responses in the Daily to any suggestion that Cal Poly more properly respect and reflect its ethnic diversity.

When people express themselves as Mr. Heirshberg has, their lack of tolerance and social decorum is evident for all to see — especially the institution which is mandated to create an environment and curriculum which supports an ethnically diverse population. No one who reads the Daily should be surprised to find that a great many students of color choose to complete their education elsewhere after having had a taste of Cal Poly.

Heirshberg began his response with "What if Mr. McDonald could write?" and ended with "What if Mr. McDonald was forced to swallow his own spit? Obviously he is pouring it down our throats." In between, Heirshberg attacks Mr. McDonald for a "lame-duck philosophy" and for expressing himself in "high school gibberish that appeals to our sentimentality."

In fact, it is Heirshberg who appeals to sentiment. In this case, the sentiment is evidently a fear of any change to the world as he "knows" it to be. We might also describe this as the fear of the "other:" a fear of that which is not us. An education is supposed to move us beyond that sort of myopia.

By calling into question Mr. McDonald's ability to express himself, Mr. Heirshberg attempts to create a hierarchy and to grant himself this hierarchy's ascendant position. However, by committing the very failings which he accused Mr. McDonald of, Mr. Heirshberg's argument deconstructs itself, thereby undermining his assertions and criticisms of Mr. McDonald. In fact, Mr. Heirshberg was unable to make any cogent criticism of Mr. McDonald's article — yet he ironically asks "What if Mr. McDonald could write?"

(Mr. Heirshberg) is unfortunately all too representative of the general tone and scope of the responses in the Daily to any suggestion that Cal Poly more properly respect and reflect its ethnic diversity.

In questioning our "reality," Mr. McDonald's work reflects the tradition of skepticism which pervades modern intellectual thought. To go a step farther, Nietzsche claims that you can only gain from a text what you bring to that text; in the area of ethnic diversity, too many responses in the Daily reflect readers who bring a fearful and restrictive world view or weltanschauung. Education cannot take place in an environment as hostile as a closed mind. For that matter, neither can true caring for other humans.

I have focused on Mr. Heirshberg thus far because he offered a letter which was deemed "representational" of a large segment of student opinion. Evidently Cal Poly's programs of cultural diversity have been an abject failure in his and many other cases. His response serves as the microcosm which allows the interested reader to ponder the macrocosm which is Cal Poly.

The administration insists that the diversity programs are effective and offers that "minority" enrollment has increased during this past decade. I ask what good is accomplished by inducing students of color to enroll at Poly when the racial atmosphere is such that many of these same students leave behind Poly's academic excellence in an effort to gain their education in a less hostile atmosphere?

What good is accomplished by inducing students of color to enroll at Poly when the racial atmosphere is such that many of these same students leave behind Poly's academic excellence in an effort to gain their education in a less hostile atmosphere?

Either we begin now to learn from our past inequities and in doing so attempt to create both a better present and future, or we are guilty of impeding the moral development of our species. Continued moral stagnation will certainly lead to suffering on a scale that has yet to be seen in the short stay of humanity here on this Earth.

Nietzsche left to us the idea of learning to "cleanse" ourselves in the "dirty water" of the masses. This task proves impossible for all but the most gifted; rather, we must attempt to cleanse humanity and the water of life which at once sustains, and yet drowns, so many.

To this end, I propose the formation of a forum which will allow for the discussion of pertinent issues among concerned students and faculty. It is time for us to align ourselves on the most fundamental of issues: How do you regard your fellow inhabitants on this Earth? If your interest lies in finding similarities where others see only differences, then please contact me through the Daily. I have some ideas — I would like to hear yours.

By working together we will find that the concerns of one group are often the concerns of ourselves. The problem in this world is not so much its people, but rather the institutions and systems by which we order our existence. The time is long past when we can allow those who think as we do to stand alone in their struggle for an egalitarian philosophy in our world. In today's rapidly changing world, each person must "stand up for their rights" by standing up for the rights of others or the future will hold yet another Dark Age. To paraphrase Voltaire: We are guilty of the good that we did not do.

Think to yourself for just one brief moment what sort of person you might become if you lived in a world which was reflective of your innermost moral and spiritual beliefs. Helping to make Cal Poly such an institution can be the first step in this process; all it takes is some thought and your good acts. If we lead, Cal Poly must follow.

Amazing What A Dorm Room Will Hold...

Now how are you going to get it all home?

Clothes, books, computer, sound system, tv, sports equipment - there's no way you're going to get even half of it on a plane or in a friend's car. But Pak Mail can get it wherever you're going - fast.

We'll pack it, box it, seal it, tape it, tie it, ship it, or overnight it...or, whatever you need to get it there on time and in one piece. And...we'll save you all the hassle!

GYMNASTICS: Cal Poly club has two part-time assistant coaches, but coach themselves, too

Jan. 17 at the Spartan Open in San Jose. They will compete against 12 other teams.

Unfortunately, the competitions also pose problems for the members.

"It's tough, because it's expensive to compete," said Paton.

The team members are required to buy uniforms to wear at the meets, and pay for travel fares and hotel costs out of their own pocket. But the expenses are the usual part of the program — the Gymnastics Club has struggled with its financial backing from the beginning.

"We are totally self-supportive," Lockhart said. "In the past we haven't received money from anyone. The only money we made was through fundraising."

This year, Paton said the Gymnastics Club hopes to obtain some of the $20,000 offered by the ASI Sports Club Council.

In addition to financial difficulties, Paton said that problems with Rec Sports almost made the Gymnastics Club obsolete.

Last year, safety evaluations of clubs on campus were held by Rec Sports. Paton said that the Gymnastics Club was classified as a high-risk sport.

According to Paton, the club now requires each member to have their own insurance and fill out a form that waives the facility's liability for the Gymnastics Club.

"Safety is our motto," Paton said.

Another motto which the Gymnastics Club holds to firmly is dedication. The team practices for three hours, six days a week. For club members, the practice hours are optional, but the team members are required to attend at least five days.

"The hardest thing about being on the team would be how much pain you're in after a hard workout, and then going in the next night to do it all again," Paton said.

Paton said that he feels confident about the success of this year's team. He said that the new members have been working hard and will boost the overall score of the team at competition.

Seo, a business administration freshman, was one of the top gymnasts to come out of Hawaii. Paton said he is one of the new rising stars added to the men's team.

"I tell myself that I have to stay home and study," said Seo. "But there's a magnetic force pulling me (to the gym). It's addicting."

Seo also said that practices are more difficult without a full-time athletic coach.

"I wish we did have a coach that came and helped out all of the time," Seo said. "But I'm glad that we have a coach at all."

The Gymnastics Club members said they were fortunate enough to have two volunteer coaches who donate as much time to the program as they can.

"The Gymnastics Club has struggled for such a long time to get off the ground — one roadblock after another. It's been a long upward climb and now we're at the top."

Dave Lockhart
Gymnastics Club Member

"But we do a good job coaching each other," Paton said.

Volunteer Coach Dr. Steve Norby was once a competitor at UC-Davis. In his spare time, Norby coaches the team on rings.

"I didn't know that we'd have much of a program this year," Norby said. "But coming in and watching (the team) practice has been real encouraging."

The club's other volunteer coach, Arno Lascari, has been with the Cal Poly gymnastics program since 1984.

"It's a tough job to get a team to be able to compete," Lascari said. "(The team this year) seems to be very enthusiastic about taking the job on. But they've got their work cut out for them."

As a competitor himself at the University of Michigan and internationally in the 1960s, Lascari said he wants to see men's gymnastics return to its original values.

"Cal Poly is on the right track," he said. "(Gymnastics here, is) done purely for the joy of it — not for the money or the glory. It's for self-improvement and it can really be fun."

Lascari said he would like to see the club perform more exhibitions. Already, the competition team has held several demonstrations on the trampoline at Farmer's Market.

Paton said the team members have become good friends. "We are trying to make an extra effort to have fun activities besides serious competition," he said.

Eagen said that he is happy to see the club continue as long as it has.

"I think it's wonderful they kept it going," Eagen said. "The tough part is, being a club, you don't have priority."

But even through the barriers of safety, finances and low support, the club and men's team has survived.

"The Gymnastics Club has struggled for such a long time to get off the ground — one roadblock after another," said Lockhart. "It's been a long upward climb and now we're at the top."

The club practices on Monday, Wednesday and Friday from 5-8 p.m. and Tuesday and Thursday from 6-9 p.m. at Crandall Gym.

team isn't doing so well in school, we will make him stay home and study instead of going out," Rondeau said.

Rondeau believes the team will do well overall. He also has a few individual goals he wants to accomplish before the season comes to an end.

"I at least want to be in the top three in Pac-10 and be in the top three in nationals," he said.

"My overall goal for the team is to have at least three individuals be All-American," Cowell said. "I believe they can do it."

BASELINE: Author's first attempt at writing fiction pits Cal Poly versus UCSB in the women's basketball season finale

In the VIP seats, Cal Poly President Warren Baker is seen waving his green and gold pom-poms in the air with a subtle grin on his face.

The crowd noise fades as the public address announcer's voice rings through the complex.

"GOOD EVENING LADIES AND GENTLEMAN, AND WELCOME TO MOTT COMPLEX FOR TONIGHT'S BIG WEST SHOWDOWN BETWEEN UC-SANTA BARBARA" — the crowd boos in unison again — "AND YURRRR CAL POLY MUS-TANGS!" The fans roar their approval.

AFTER THE STARTING LINEUPS ARE ANNOUNCED, Mustang senior point guard Denise DelChiaro joins her mother and they walk to the center of the court. A single spotlight from the rafters shines brightly on DelChiaro, who is playing in her final game, and her mother.

The crowd rises, and the duo sings the national anthem. Many in attendance sing along, then cheer appreciatively when the piece is concluded.

The lights come back on and the teams huddle with their coaches for one last word.

The stage has been set. The nervous anticipation of the crowd creates an eerie silence in the gym.

Moments later, the players shake hands with their archrivals and position themselves for the jump ball. The official puts the whistle in his mouth and tosses the ball toward the Mott Complex ceiling. A new chapter in the Cal Poly-UCSB rivalry is started.

IT COULD HAPPEN.

And think of the fringe benefits — heckling friends who are UCSB alumni over a cold brew at the local sports pub.

The thought makes me all warm and fuzzy inside.

BASELINE

Looking down the road

RIVALRY.

All athletes thrive on it and all fans rush to see it. It's the Giants and Dodgers, the Niners and Cowboys and the Lakers and Celtics.

The sports world grabs hold of rivalries in its push for tradition. And rivalry is tradition.

When Cal Poly was invited to join the Big West, the immediate response was one of excitement for a higher level of competition.

But now, as the news sinks in and teams are busy building in hopes of competing successfully, one just has to take a peek down Highway 101 to see how the Big West is going to affect Cal Poly.

UC-Santa Barbara awaits Cal Poly in the Big West, and it would seem the Mustangs would be salivating over the opportunity to step into the athletic arena with the Gauchos.

This has the making of a great college rivalry. Cal-Stanford, UCLA-USC and now Cal Poly versus UC-Santa Barbara.

It will be the battle of the Central Coast. It will be the fight between two representatives of two separate California college systems. Most prevalently, it will be a rivalry between two highly successful academic programs that many of us chose between when we came out of high school or junior college.

We are familiar with UCSB because we almost went there and we have good friends who do. And it's only an hour and a half down that freeway.

It could be like those spirited high school days when half the school went on organized road trips and filled up a large portion of an opponent's gym. It is that feeling of being a part of something significant, some piece of history, some rivalry that makes sport great.

THE YEAR IS 2003, AND CAL POLY is hosting UCSB in the final game of the women's basketball season. It has been a rough year for Cal Poly athletics thus far. Our two soccer teams both finished second in the Big West, with the men finishing just a game behind UCSB.

The football team struggled to a .500 season after last year's national semifinal loss. The cross country team did well to send a couple runners to Nationals, but no one placed highly there. And the volleyball team lost in the first round of the Big West Tournament to end its season.

Last week, the men's basketball team needed a victory in its final game to win the Big West title and gain a berth in the NCAA tournament. The only obstacle was a road game at UCSB, and the Gauchos came out fighting.

In front of their fans, the Gauchos turned a big first half lead into a slim victory.

FOR CAL POLY FANS, the loss to the hated Gauchos was displeasing enough, but the memory of the brawl was something that would linger in the minds of the Mustang faithful for years.

Midway through the second half, one of the UCSB fans dumped a Coke on a Cal Poly player after he dove into the stands trying to save an errant pass.

The furious Mustang player screamed at the fan and pointed his bony index finger into the fan's chest.

While his attention was diverted, a UCSB player streaked in behind him and took a swing at the back of his head.

The punch barely grazed his head, but bedlam ensued. Both benches cleared and the storied brawl exponentially intensified the distaste between the teams.

FOR THE CAL POLY STUDENTS AND ALUMNI who are heading into Mott Complex for the women's basketball game, the recent events are vivid in their collective mind. The men's team is out, but the memory of the game and brawl are anything but history.

This game is about redemption.

Cal Poly is out of the playoff picture, relegated to the role of spoiler. A UCSB win would give the Gauchos a third straight Big West title in women's basketball. If, however, the Mustangs were to defeat the Gauchos, Long Beach State would win the title.

In this rivalry, the next best thing to winning is seeing UCSB lose.

Fans fill Mott Complex to the rafters and beyond.

About 10 minutes before the game starts, UCSB returns to the floor for the final warmups, and the crowd responds with hisses and boos loud enough to make the walls shake.

The jeers, however, are interrupted by cheers, as now Cal Poly takes the floor to a rousing ovation. As the warmups continue, the fans begin to chant in sync. "Poly! Poly! Poly!"

A smaller contingency of borderline obnoxious Poly fans successfully start a chant of "Gow-chos suck! Gow-chos suck!"

Gymnasts leap from obscurity

By Maxine Gisinger
Daily Staff Writer

The 19-year-old student wakes up at 6 a.m. to an ache in his left leg and four stinging blisters on the palms of his hands. Like any athlete, junior aeronautical engineer Basum Elsokary suffers the pains of yesterday's practice.

But Elsokary doesn't kick a ball around a field, or tackle another player. Instead, he tumbles and flips — Elsokary is a gymnast.

If you've never heard of the existence of the club, you're not alone. Cal Poly doesn't fund gymnastics because it is not an intercollegiate team, and like most club sports, gymnastics hasn't been well publicized in the past.

One part of the club is a competitive men's team. Seniors Dave Lockhart and Eric Paton are the two returning members, along with newcomers freshman Kyle Seo, and Elsokary. Lockhart also said that two other club members might be possible team members.

But according to Lockhart, the club's president, the Gymnastics Club is beginning to grow and change.

With more advertising and club promotion, Lockhart said the club has reached about fifty members this year — the most ever.

"It makes me feel good that people are interested," he said. "I'm really positive about the future of the Gymnastics Club on campus."

The club was founded in 1976 as a place where beginners and experienced gymnasts alike could practice. At this time, Cal Poly had an intercollegiate women's team, but no men's team.

According to Lance Eagen,

one of the co-founders of the men's team, the athletics department terminated the program after the women's coach left Cal Poly for another university.

Eagen, who had been in gymnastics since elementary school, said he and three other gymnast friends in the club wanted to start competing again. What followed was the development of the competitive men's team in 1987.

"It was something to do," Eagen said. "It wasn't a need, but it was an opportunity."

Since then, the men's team has competed against university clubs and teams at the Division II level across the country. The team made it to nationals its first year, and almost every year after that.

In 1991 the team placed second in the collegiate National Championships at UC-Davis and in 1993 it placed third at the Nationals in Springfield, Mass.

"I love to compete," said Seo. "It's when you end up accomplishing your goals."

This year, Lockhart said the team is going to try to compete at least once a month. The first meet is on

Youthful grapplers hope to surprise Pac-10

By Kelly Koring
Daily Staff Writer

The Cal Poly wrestling team is out to prove that it can be a powerhouse in Pac 10 competition, despite losing many of its top athletes.

Head Coach Lennis Cowell said that although two-time Pac 10 Champion Jake Gaeir has graduated along with some other strong seniors, he is hopeful this year will give other wrestlers a chance to prove their abilities.

"I'm excited," Cowell said. "I like being the underdogs."

"There are a lot of unknown guys this season who are ready to make their mark," Cowell said.

The team's first meet was this past weekend at an individual tournament at Cal State Fullerton.

Cowell said the tournament came a bit early for the team as far as conditioning is concerned, but the wrestlers were ready.

Senior Neal Mason won the competition in the 167-pound weight class.

"Neal had a good performance," Cowell said. "He's moved up this year from 158 pounds, where he finished third in the Pac 10 last year," Cowell said.

In addition to Mason's win, senior Tim Cano (150 pounds), senior Dominic Boutain (142 pounds) and sophomore Tyson Rondeau (118 pounds) all placed second in their respective weight classes.

Cowell added that this team is young but hungry for wins.

According to Cowell, freshman Brad Takanaka and Ron Long wrestled well in the intersquad

Green and Gold competition two weeks ago.

Cowell said the toughest competition for the team will be Oregon State and Arizona State.

"These schools are the preseason favorites," he said. "The real battle will be over third place."

Cal Poly has a lot of young wrestlers, but it still has senior experience and leadership, Cowell said. The seniors leading the team, according to Cowell, will be Boutain, Cano, Clark Conover, Dan Lashley, and Neal Mason.

In 1993, Mason (158 pounds) was third in Pac 10 and Lashley (190 pounds) placed fourth. Rondeau (118 pounds) and sophomore Gail Miller (177 pounds) are hoping to do well in this year's Pac 10 meet.

Miller was injured last year and, according to Cowell, is looking for a big season. Rondeau had a good season last year and Cowell expects he will do even better this season.

"We have made up for the seniors that have left," Rondeau said. "I think we are better than we were last year."

According to Rondeau the team has unity and they do watch out for each other.

"If some guy on the
